

A father was strolling through a botanical garden with his five-year-old daughter. Dad she asked, "How can people believe in a God they can't see?" While pondering the question they came upon a gentleman's watch laying in the grass. The father being a university professor and quick of mind instantly said, "Isn't that amazing! That watch has probably been lying in that grass for billions of years evolving by itself."

The daughter surprised at the foolishness of her father's statement said, "Dad that's not true, the watch was made by a jeweler."

The father replied how do you know that? Isn't it possible that over billions of years this watch was able to put itself together?

The little girl laughed Daddy that's just not possible.

The professor replied why? After all there's thousands of watches in the world that are thrown away surely some of those parts would fall in the right place.

The child said with a very firm tone, "I am right Daddy" you are so wrong.

The father said how do you know have you ever met the Jeweller? The girl replied no.

Do you know where he lives or what his name is? Have you met anyone who has talked with him or even seen him?

The small child reluctantly replied No Daddy but a watch just can't make itself.

The wise old man wanting to make his point clear in this small child's mind said, "But can't you see that there are millions and millions of watch pieces and clock hands in the world in every country. All these watch parts may have been blown around the world in very strong winds. Surely over billions of years some would fall in the right place."

The father's child standing with her hands firmly on her hips and in the strongest voice said, "Daddy you are wrong a watch cannot make itself."

The Old man replied "Perhaps some other man made the watch."

Daddy people can't make watches only Jewellers know how to put all the parts together to make it work.

So the wise old professor said, "So you believe that this watch was made by a Jeweller even though you have never met him or talked with anyone who knows him. You have never seen him or spoken to him yet you are convinced that he exists why?"

Perplexed the small girl said, "Because a watch has to be made by someone who knows all about watches only a Jeweller knows how to make them tell the exact time everyday."

The father gave in; yes my child you are right for a watch to exist there has to be someone with the intelligence to put it together. How did you know a Jeweller existed when you saw the watch it was because of the evidence?

For a watch to exist we know a Jeweler exist.

People believe in God because of the evidence. They look at the stars, the sun and moon all working so perfectly together keeping this world from dying and spinning out into space.

Just as people look at that watch lying in the grass and know that a higher intelligence made it. So it is when we look at the beauty of a flower and a sunset or the birds flying and the fish swimming or we see the majesty of the lion. We know that there is a higher intelligence that made them all that's why people believe in God.

The little child with wonder and delight said to the wise old man. "Now I understand thankyou Daddy".
